

The importance and usefulness of comparative judgement for educational assessment

Jeffrey Buckley
KTH Royal Institute of Technology, Sweden.
Athlone Institute of Technology, Ireland.

Abstract

While comparative judgement has now been around for a number of years, it continues to be used in a variety of new ways and across multiple subjects. Jeffrey has specific experience using comparative judgement in design education which he will discuss as well as presenting other applications described in the literature. The intention of this presentation is to show both how comparative judgement works in practice for assessing students work, and also to demonstrate some of its other educational uses as well.